"Deific Mourning", stillborn in anxiety, grief and sickness, every riff agonizingly culled from terror, despair and disintegration of a dying form. A body desecrated by vaccine damage, an inflamed nervous system and dysautonomia, pumping fear into every heart beat and waking moment.

An album written and lived in a state of horror and uncertainty. Unable to play music for years, not sure if he would live to finish writing and recording Deific Mourning, Kyle House (Acephalix, Negative Prayer) brought in long time friend and bandmate Daniel Butler (Vastum, Acephalix) to write lyrics and execute Death Grunts.

Heavier on the Doom side of Death than Decrepisy's Emetic Communion, Deific Mourning pulls from Goth-Industrial influences that seep through the infected wounds that comprise the decomposing body of the album. Each track a stage of grief and disbelief as life abandons form into the mystery of the unknown.
