The comeback of Swedish Cult Death Metal band Internal Decay!

The fires burn again!
Spawned in 1991, Internal Decay were an influential presence in the early Death Metal underground in Stockholm, Sweden since 1987.

In 1991 the band entered Twilight Studios to record their eponymous demo.  Released in the same year, the tape featured four tracks of raw, unpolished and crude Death Metal.

It immediately gained loads of attention in the underground tape trading community and fanzines, leading to live gig bookings and a record deal.
Through relentless rehearsals and stage shows the band developed the unique brand of eerie, otherworldly melodic Death Metal that would eventually emerge on the classic 1993 album debut “A Forgotten Dream”.

Recorded at iconic Sunlight Studios in 1992-93, it was engineered by the legendary Thomas Skogsberg and mixed and produced by Lars Lindén.  Despite recording at the literal ground zero of the Stockholm “buzzsaw” sound, the band deliberately moved in another sonic direction, opting for a more atmospheric sound.

The album got great responses from the Death Metal scene and led to more and bigger shows, furthering the bands reputation as a fearsome live act.
Entering the studio again in 1994, Internal Decay recorded the single song “Et Cetera Ad Inifitum” for a metal compilation.

That album was never released in the end, and in the following months the band became inactive as the members went separate ways.

Individually the members have made an impact in bands like Therion, Epitaph, Deformity, Pandemonic, Stormrider, A Canorous Quintet and Serpentine to name a few.
With a reissue of the debut album out in december 2025, and a new EP “Fires of the Forgotten” releasing on Hammerheart records in February 2026, Internal Decay are back and ready to unleash their distinctive style of darkly melodic Death Metal upon the world once more.

• First new Internal Decay material in over 30 years, capturing the original vibe of their early material
• Original founders Mikael Vega and Kim Blomkvist return with a fresh line-up
